Audiovox Reaches Settlement with INViSiON Industries on Patent Infringement Lawsuit

Audiovox to receive past damages and royalties for future sales

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y., Nov. 3 /PRNewswire-FirstCall/ -- Audiovox Corporation (Nasdaq: VOXX) today announced that it reached a settlement agreement with INViSiON Industries, Inc., a Florida based corporation, regarding the patent infringement suit filed earlier this year in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

In June 2008, Audiovox announced the suit, alleging that INViSiON infringed on three of the Company's U.S. Patents -- Nos. 6,899,365, 7,245,274 and D448,009 -- all of which apply to headrest-mounted, rear-seat entertainment systems for automobiles. These patents protect Audiovox's commercially successful line of headrest-mounted, rear-seat automobile entertainment systems.

Audiovox will receive payment for past damages and an ongoing royalty fee for future business. Additionally, Audiovox has received an exclusive license on related patents from Christopher Vitito, the principal of INViSiON and owner of mobile video patents for additional mobile video technology.

Patrick Lavelle, President and CEO of Audiovox stated, "We are pleased to have reached this settlement with INViSiON. Our intellectual properties are one of our greatest assets and it is our intention to vigorously protect them at all costs."
